SOME OBSTACLES TO GOOD WILL

Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath

(Across the Western Plains)

(Concluded from last week)

But Mr. Blumenthal has unearthed even stranger evidence of anti-Jewish sentiment. Under the heading "Sacred Writings," we find: the Vedas, Koran, Science and Health (italics our own), Book of Mormon, yet not the word Torah. We find Golgotha but not Sinai. Under "worship" we find: Lord's Prayer, Mass doxology, Ave Maria, paternoster, and twenty other terms, but not Kaddish. This Roget reference book includes such stale phrases as "Hobson's Choice" but not such perennial phrases as Ten Commandments, People of the Book, or Chosen People. It includes Judas but omits Moses. Under "piety" it lists Christian and Catholic, and an opposite column, under the heading "impiety", contains the words Scribes and Pharisees, who, we remember, came of our people. All of which, were it not so serious and pathetic, would be highly amusing.

Abraham, whom we might well seek under the heading of patriarch or sage, is indexed under "sham" and is found amid such fine company as "lie like a conjuror," "play the hypocrite," "sail under false colors," and even that bigotted phrase current centuries ago, "sham Abraham" remains therein. "And why," asks Mr. Blumenthal," "is the word 'decalogue' dragged in with a small 'd' as though it were a common herring? Everyone knows that there was only one historic Decalogue and that Moses (whose name is entirely omitted) had something to do with it. It is unlikely that the editor would ever make the same mistake with jesus and the sermon on the mount."

Recognizing the profound influence which mere words and phrases have over human thought and action, we can well understand the harm affected by such a subtle prejudice as Roget's Thesaurus still fosters. The nations of the earth were plunged into a holocaust of blood "to make the world safe for democracy;" a poor harried pervert was recently burned alive in a Texas jail because he was a "nigger;" the Republican Party in the States rode victoriously into office because all good Protestants fear the Pope and because the Republicans were responsible for the "Prosperity" which so few enjoy. Words dominate our lives and as long as the Jew is associated with such words as "cunning, crafty, designing, wily, usurer, heretic, deceiver, Shylock, money grubber, harpy," good will is utterly impossible. Not until he be recognized (and surely he must be so recognized first of all by scholars and so-called scientific books) as "monotheist, civilizer, People of the Book, brethren of Jesus, cosmopolitan, Torah bearers, descendants of Moses and the Prophets," not until then will belated justice be accorded this Ancient People. These intangible and hidden misconceptions are perhaps the most challenging and stubborn obstacles which all proponents of good will have yet to overcome.

To end this article in a major key and to grant some hope that we are moving in this direction we might quote the Reverend Dr. Henry Howard, a British subject from Australia, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, who, in a sermon delivered from his pulpit some months ago, eloquently petitioned his people to "make friends with the Jews. Put yourselves in living, loving sympathy with them, evoke the best that is in them . . . for here is a highly specialized and pedigreed people—a people that with tremendous tenacity has preserved the highest ethical ideals of the human race."

As such opinions and admonitions are heeded and as we likewise, as our contribution toward better understanding, relinquish that despicable word "goy" and clothe the word Christian with its finer connotations, even these most disturbing and difficult obstacles will be overcome, and true brotherhood will be attained at last.

THE MANDATES COMMISSION'S REPORT AND LORD PASSFIELD'S INTERVIEW

Two important pronouncements were made last week on the subject of the Jewish position in Palestine. One was made (rather an authoritative forecast of what will shortly be published was printed by the London Daily Telegraph and the Jewish Telegraphic Agency) by the Mandates Commission of the League of Nations. The Commission having scrutinized all the reports and evidence submitted by the various interested parties, finds that the mandatory power has not fulfilled the terms of the mandate with regard to the Jews. The mandate was an agreement whereby Great Britain undertook to supervise the establishment of a Jewish National homeland in Palestine. This undertaking implied the elementary obligation to ensure security of life and property. The riots of last August indicated a failure to provide the necessary conditions of security. The government of Palestine whose direct duty it was to look after these matters was remiss in the performance of its task. On this point the Mandates Commission rejects the opinion of the Shaw Commission which tended to absolve both the Arabs and the administration from blame for the riots. The Mandates Commission's finding is simple and to the point. It is not distorted by political biases. It calls a spade a spade.

The other pronouncement was in the form of an interview granted by Lord Passfield to the correspondent of the New York Jewish Forward.

The gist of Lord Passfield's statement may be divided into three major parts:

(a) Lord Passfield gives assurance that it is the intention of the government to carry out the terms of the Balfour Declaration and the Mandate to the letter. The stoppage of immigration was only a temporary measure dictated by economic conditions.

(b) He draws a distinction between the terms a "national homeland for the Jews" and a "Jewish state". He insists that the Balfour Declaration and the Mandate provide only for a "national homeland" but not for a "state". He is prepared to implement the promise of securing a "national homeland," and maintains that every step taken by his government was consistent with the purpose of establishing a "national homeland."

(c) He upbraids the Jews for having become "panicky" and for losing confidence in his government. He particularly berates Weizmann for his attitude of impatience and distrust.

On the whole, the tenor of Passfield's interview shows considerable of a peeve. And at this point it may be recalled that the letter by Dr.

Camps Provide Holidays For Many

One hundred and fifty boys, between eight and fourteen years of age, left Montreal July 11, for the Bnai Brith camp at Lac Long. The group comprises the second party of a total of 500 children who will spend two weeks at the welfare camp. The camp was established in 1921 by the Bnai Brith Lodge of Montreal. The boys are chosen by the welfare department of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies. Under the supervision of I. M. Konowitz, 15 councillors are in charge of the boys. A large bathing beach provides swimming facilities under the care of swimming instructors. Over 800 Jewish boys and girls, women and children will be given country holidays this summer, according to figures issued from the central registration bureau at the Baron de Hirsch Institute. About 500 boys will be entertained at the Bnai Brith Camp in groups of 125 at a time. The Council Camp will take four groups of 40 girls, and the Laurentian Fresh Air Camp will care for 200 women and children. Each camper is registered and the time of his holiday is arranged through the central bureau and before going to camp he is given a free medical examination at the Herzl Dispensary. Many of the campers are "old-timers," having attended camp for the past four or five years. The camps will remain open until August 28. Contrary to expectations, the sum of $15,000 which the Mount Royal Lodge No. 729 Bnai Brith hoped to raise for the maintenance of their permanent camp site at Lac Long in the Laurentian Mountains for underprivileged boys has not been reached. At a special meeting July 11, under the chairmanship of Philip Meyerovitch, president, it was decided to carry on a more intensive canvass of the 500 members of the lodge. Outlining the arrangements that govern the sojourn of the children at the camp, Mr. Meyerovitch pointed out that each boy costs the lodge $20 for a fortnight's stay.

Harold S. Freeman, member of the committee, said that volunteer workers of the lodge within the past few weeks had converted stretches of virgin forest into a practical and healthful spot for the camp. Well-wooded, the site contains about 60 acres of cleared land, from which playgrounds have been created. Water supply from a clear cold spring has been pipel directly into camp, a bathing beach, a dining and recreation hall and tent accommodation for 150 children at a time are further features.

What, indeed, does that word cheerfulness imply? It means a contented spirit, it means a pure heart, it means a kind and loving disposition, it means humility and charity, it means a generous appreciation of others, and a modest opinion of self.

Memory never dies, nor grows weaker in the mind of age; it strengthens with advancing years, until the shadow of things gone by seem to the old more real than the reality, the old live in the past as the young live in the future; memory makes its own habitation.

Describes Conditions of Russian Jews

"Yes, we are equal and we have the protection of the state against pogroms. For that we are grateful. But what were the occasional Czarist pogroms compared to the constant brutal pogrom which is being practised on our people now?"

It is Citizen Menachem of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics describing the conditions of the Jews in Russia of the Soviets in an interview by Leo Glassman in the July-August issue of the Bnai Brith magazine, for July 20th. Mr. Glassman has contributed articles to various Anglo-Jewish publications and, as associate editor of the Jewish Telegraphic Agency, spent more than ten months in Russia during 1928 and 1929.

His interview in the Bnai Brith Magazine gives the conflicting views of Menachem, typical of the Jews "liberated" by the Soviet, and of Comrade Kalinin, president of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics.

"The Czar was bad for the Jews, but the Bolsheviks are worse," declares Citizen Menachem. "Under the Czar we had hoped for a better day, we knew that a better day would come eventually. Today we do not even hope."

Comrade Kalinin thinks otherwise.

"The Soviet government was not content with giving the Jews absolute political and civil equality with the rest of the population, nor even with adopting drastic measures, such as had never been employed by any capitalistic government, to suppress and exterminate anti-Semitism; it set itself the aim of normalizing the economic life of the Jewish masses and drawing them into the scheme of socialist reconstruction.

"Altogether there have been settled on the land to date some 150,000 Jews. In the course of the last two years the number of Jewish workers and clerks has grown by considerably over 100,000 reaching a total today of over 400,000 in the 'profsoyuzi' (trade unions). We are trying to turn Jews who at present have no trade into productive workers."

MANDATES COMMISSION BLAMES PALESTINE TROUBLE ON BRITAIN

The London Daily Telegraph published a report July 10 on Palestine by the Mandates Commission of the League of Nations, in which the limited number of British troops in Palestine and inadequacy of the police force are blamed for the spread of last summer's disturbances. The Mandates Commission, according to The Daily Telegraph, is of the opinion that the Palestine troubles did not arise suddenly, but were preceded by a series of warning events, of which the incident at the Wailing Wall was the principal.

As regards the premediated aspect of the riots, the commission is not satisfied that the merciful view taken by the majority of the Palestine inquiry commission, concerning the attitude of the Arab leaders, is justified. Although the report agrees that the Arab attacks were directed only against the Jews, the Mandates Commission regards as unjustified the view that the Palestine movement was not directed against British authority.

The Mandates Commission, according to The Daily Telegraph, regrets in its report that the mandatory power has not succeeded in the total execution of the mandate, has not carried out its obligation to encourage the establishment of a Jewish national home, and has also failed to insure the condition essential for the development of a national centre for the Jewish race — security for life and property.

Peace of soul has nothing in common with indifference.

Drummond Shiels, the Undersecretary for Colonies to Mr. Marcus, M. P., published in a recent issue of the London Jewish Chronicle, likewise betrays his annoyance with the Jews for squealing when they were being hurt. Apparently the Colonial office has been hurt by the Jewish protests and is not a little nettled.

If we may digress for a moment we would like to throw one remark at our "Ahad Haamists" of the stripe of Charles H. Joseph—remind them that even Lord Passfield in his most illiberal interpretation of Zionist rights concedes us a "national homeland" and not merely a homeland. This crew, however, will probably not go to Passfield for their ideas on the subject. They will go to the most ultimate source—the Mufti and his minions like Vincent Shean.

In his interview with the representative of the Forward—one of the most important Socialist newspapers in the world, Lord Passfield spoke rather as Socialist to Socialist than as diplomat to a people whose destiny he in a measure controls. There is a human touch in his words. There is lacking the restraint that usually ties the tongues of men in high offices. He spoke with feeling, as if he really meant what he said. There is a reversion to the accents of Sidney Webb. And yet could Sidney Webb, in his pre-Passfield days have rung in those undertones of officiality which one somehow detects even in his unofficial utterances? This is doubtful. The title, and the atmosphere of the House of Lords seem to have permeated the being of Sidney Webb, the socialist, the economist, the humanist, and conditioned his attitude to things.

Well, we now have a clear formulation of the Colonial secretary's attitude towards Zionism. Formerly, we had to infer his views from his actions, and there was an inclination to assume that some of his hostile actions were the result of haste caused by extreme pressure of multitudinous problems. There was a desire to make allowances, out of regard for Sidney Webb's reputation, and the Labor government's reputed friendship for the Jews. Sidney Webb's statement has now left no room for doubt, and no basis for hope.

Let us grant that Webb-Passfield is right in his definition of the purpose of the Balfour Declaration and the Mandate—that they contemplated only a "national homeland" and not a Jewish state. As a matter of fact we are not aware of any Zionists who thought differently. Zionist policy since the war has been shaped on the assumption that we were to get nothing more than a "national homeland". Have the actions of the MacDonald government been consistent with this avowed purpose?

In a "national homeland", or in a "homeland" of any sort, there has to be first of all security of life and property. The officials maintained by the MacDonald government have not provided this security. Under British legal procedure the immediate agents of crime are held responsible. The immediate agents in Palestine were the Arabs and the leaders who incited them. In dealing with the situation, however, the Shaw Commission saw fit to depart from the accepted principle, and wandered far afield to search for the alleged ultimate causes. The MacDonald government allowed itself to be guided by the Shaw report and instead of dealing summarily with the perpetrators of crime as judicial tribunals do, in consonance with British practice, it distributed the guilt among irrelevant social, economic and political conditions. We dread to think of the kind of justice we would get say in Canada if a similar procedure were employed here.

Lord Passfield concedes that we are entitled to a "national homeland". Admitting that this term is one of limitation, it nevertheless implies within its scope a code of indefeasible rights. Even inmates of a penal institution have within their sphere certain inalienable rights. Will it be fairly contended that the Jews have been allowed the exercise of their indisputable rights? Obviously the "national homeland" is not an accomplished fact yet. It is still to be achieved. Has the mandatory power done what it might have to facilitate this achievement? Have we exceeded our rights? The complaints of the Shaw Commission do not point to acts beyond the zone of our rights. They aim at the very heart of the enterprise. In so far as Lord Passfield allows himself to be guided by the Shaw report he does not impeach us; he stultifies himself.

In his apologia Lord Passfield admits impliedly that the stoppage of immigration, if permanent would be a violation of the terms of the Mandate. It falls upon him to justify the temporary suspension. Now, in view of the fact that the Palestine administration has granted the visas, and that the economic conditions in Palestine are known to have warranted the ingression of the immigrants, what justification has the Colonial Minister for his summary cancellation of the visas? Was his act dictated by economics or by politics?

Again, Lord Passfield forgot to mention his latest "white paper", which cannot by any stretch of the imagination be reconciled with the accepted formula of a "national homeland". Moreover, the utterances of Dr. Shiels, the appointment of Mr. Luke as the British representative at the hearings of the Mandates Commission, the manner and method of announcing the restrictive regulations—these do not indicate a tendency to interpret the implications of the term "national homeland" liberally.

Lord Passfield rebukes the Jews and Dr. Weizmann for being impatient with him. Goodness knows Dr. Weizmann has if anything suffered from an excess of temperateness and patience. During these last ten years Dr. Weizmann has advocated, in season and out of season, patience, and faith in the British government. His very policy was based on his attitude of confidence. There were times when his faith was sorely tried. But he never wavered in his loyalty. There is a limit, however, to any virtue. How in the name of common sense can Lord Passfield expect the Jews to simulate happiness when he so crudely tries them? Massacres, destruction of property, stoppage of immigration, prohibition of the purchase of land, humiliations and degradations of every sort—are we expected to swallow these pills, and pretend to be cheerful?

Compare the conduct of the Arabs during the past few years with that of the Jews. The Arab leader, the Grand Mufti, was an escaped convict. Restored to power, under pay by the British government, he has never ceased to rail against the Balfour Declaration, against the government that supported it—against the whole arrangement of British interference. His followers have consistently proclaimed their contempt for the Balfour Declaration and British domination. On the other hand, there is Weizmann, the professor of Manchester University, with his record of service to the Allies, a genuine lover of the British and their institutions, preaching among the far-flung affiliations of his organization faith in British integrity, gaining the good will of millions of Jews throughout the world for Britain and things British. Well, the Mufti and the Arabs are allowed to get away with everything. Weizmann is betrayed and humiliated. The Jewish people are betrayed and humiliated. Assuredly it cannot be said that Weizmann's policy of servility has been a success.

Lord Passfield's statement shows an utter disregard for the feelings of the millions of Jews who are vitally interested in Palestine. It shows an orientation in the atmosphere of Colonial office officialdom.

The Mandates Commission of the League of Nations has voiced its disapproval of the attitude of the Passfields and we have the further consolation that the spirit of justice which is characteristic of the British is still rife in the land. The Lloyd Georges and the Wedgwoods and the Ormsby Gores and the Jan Smutses—the staunch Britishers who are faithful to the cause of Zionism are truer spokesmen of the mind of Britain than the parvenu politicians who are at present at the head of the government. The Jews have a right to complain against the present government; and hope that another government will be more faithful to the British traditions of fairness and justice.

WHY BOTHER?

During the ages, the superstitions that were associated with the healing art have gradually disappeared. In the earliest centuries, treatment was carried out with ceremonial, incantations, mysterious potions and dances, and offerings were made to the spirits. To-day, medicine is a science based upon investigation, experiment and analysis.

In the course of this development, great progress has been made, not only in the treatment of disease but also in its prevention. In one sense, progress has been rapid, but in another, it appears to be slow because there is still much to be learned about the mechanism of the human body, and there are still diseased conditions which baffle us and which seem to be beyond our control.

One thing that has been clearly shown is that many serious and chronic diseases have their beginnings in what are apparently trivial conditions. Every advanced cancer was at one time a local disease which could have been cured. Chronic heart and kidney diseases do not begin as serious conditions; they pass through an early stage. Tuberculosis usually first shows itself as a mild localized disease.

It is for these reasons that we should bother about what we might consider to be trivial diseases or even what seems to be merely a lack of physical fitness. Proper treatment during the early stages is necessary to arrest the progress of many diseases.

The chief objection to self-medication is that it delays proper treatment, which, when it is secured in time, offers the only possible chance of nipping in the bud a condition which may lead to serious or chronic disease.

The practitioner of medicine is not a magician. The good he can do is limited by the knowledge he possesses. He does not promise cures, but he does offer the benefits of medical science, and if we are unfortunate enough to suffer, it may be because we have not availed ourselves of his skill. We still delay in securing his services, and it is such delay which leads to serious trouble.

Why bother about minor conditions of ill-health? The answer is that the best time to consider disease is when the most can be done with it, and that is before it becomes firmly rooted in the body. Proper early treatment has much to offer in the prevention of serious chronic diseases against which, in their advanced stages, we have not any specific remedy. Early Treatment is then the answer to Why Bother?

"Valuable," Don mimicked.

"Rare and old and precious," Carlie went on imperturbably. "So he wants Tress to wear them because she looks like his mama selig."

"Don't say that word and you can have everything but the emerald earrings," Tress told her. "You take the rest of the heirlooms and I'll get a new emerald necklace and bracelet to go with the earrings. In fact, those will be the very first things I buy with my share of the Heritage."

"You promised Granpa the first thing you bought would be a gold-headed cane for him," Carlie said severely.

"You give it to him if you like. There are so many things I want: A white fox fur and high white kid boots, and a white flannel dress and a black velvet coat and big black hat. Won't that be an attractive costume?"

"You will be attractive in it," Carlie said. But she did not skip for joy at the thought of her beloved's beauty. "Only you promised Granpa a gold-headed cane. Ill pay for it out of my money, if you need yours for other things, Tress. But you must give Granpa the cane. Hell like it better if it comes from you."

CHAPTER VII

Supper at the Adam Delavans' was a meager affair. Grace was not a good cook; she objected to housework, to sewing, to the Gruenturm habit of living in the past, but above all she objected to cooking.

Carlie, choking down suppers of stewed tomatoes and canned corn served with thin slices of cold boiled ham, white bread, and strong tea, sometimes longed for the monthly feast to which Aunt Henny invited the family. But when she got to Aunt Henny's she was always glad that the feast didn't come more than once a month. . . . You were afraid to be gay in Aunt Henny's dining room. You were afraid to take a second helping of the nut torte with whipped cream, and afraid not to. Aunt Henny was always getting angry at things; but Carlie didn't see how you could tell in advance which things she wasn't going to like. She was annoyed if you forgot to kiss her, but when you put up your lips, she was likely to turn her cheek and jerk away just before you touched her. She got very angry if she caught Carlie and Tress holding hands and said it wasn't nice to be demonstrative in public; but sometimes when she went over and cuddled down in Uncle Freddy's lap after dinner, you felt queer and shamed and dizzy.

Mama liked you to be demonstrative. She often grabbed you and held you to her and covered your face with kisses and said she could die loving you, she could squeese you to death. But when papa came home from the store and wanted to hug her, she always said not now as she must hurry and look at the tomatoes or they would scorch. As they generally were scorched in spite of her looking at them, Carlie always felt it was too bad papa hadn't made her stop a minute to kiss him.

It seemed strange that Aunt Henny, who was so cross with almost everybody else, was so darling to Uncle Freddy, while mama, who was so pleasant to most people, was generally cross with papa. Carlie found herself thinking about this quite seriously on the day when Tress had agreed that the first thing she would do with her Heritage money was buy Granpa a gold-headed cane. Don had stayed over at Rudnick's to have supper with Granpa and Tress, and it was so quiet at home that papa suddenly said: "You can almost hear yourself think."

"It is just as well it's only 'almost,'" mama answered. "What I think might startle you.

"I'll risk it. Penny for your thoughts," Adam offered. He put a new shining penny on the table.

"Don't be a fool. You know perfectly well you'd hate to hear the things I'd hate to be driven to saying. There isn't any dessert. I can't work miracles on fifteen dollars a week. And as we are due for the monthly gorge at Henny's tomorrow, we don't need to stuff tonight."

"A feast where love is!" Adam said, pinching his wife's cheek.

"Must you be amorous before the child? Big eyes over there will wake up some day and understand. She is nearly twelve and may understand already. Her heritage of Oriental warmth worries me enough."

"It will delight some one some day."

"Don't be vulgar. Though that is hard for your family to avoid. Tress is making eyes at every boy she sees already. Even Don. He doesn't stay at Rudnick's to enjoy his grandfather's society. And Henriette is panting for marriage at eighteen, and Henny is so mad about her Freddy that she gets purple in the face if he chats with me for five minutes. I'd almost like her to find out about Freddy and the blonde. That would take her down a peg or two.

"How do you take anyone down a peg?" Carlie asked, looking up from her fascinating game of modeling a head of Tress from the inside of a thick slice of bread.

"Don't be childish," her mother admonished. "And stop crumbling the bread all over the cloth for me to sweep up."

"I was modeling in clay," Carlie explained. "I did a head of Tress in class today and teacher said I ought to go abroad and study and when we are very rich, may I go and take a lesson every day!"

"If we ever are rich I'll be delighted to go abroad with you," Grace said. "Or anywhere to break you of your habit of mooning over a child whose mother was named Sara Oppenheimer. Some day I hope you will understand what it means to be a Maryland O'Donnel."

"She is almost twelve. She may understand now," her father said in his dry, gentle little voice.

Grace's eyes flashed. "Well, then I hope she does. Enough to stop her from growing up like your family. Only a Delavan would do things the way your brother Michael has. Anyone else would have sent a second cable after his interview with Lord Gruenturm ten days ago. But it is just like a Delavan to show an utter lack of consideration of everybody's feelings and to ignore the fact that we're all dying to know how things are getting on. And it is just like a Gruenturm to be too stingy to spend five dollars on a cable when he's likely to have a check for half a million in his pocket any minute."

Adam cleared his throat, but his voice rasped when he spoke.

"Michael has written."

"To whom?"

"Well, to all of us, you might say. But I thought father should be told first."

"Why? Why do you keep things from your own wife? When did the letter come? What does Michael say? He would write and not cable." Grace clutched the tablecloth and began plaiting its edges between her fingers.

"The letter came to the store just before I left this afternoon. Michael will be back in a few days. Perhaps he should be the one to explain."

"To explain?" Grace protested. "You mean there is something to explain? Are the dirty Shylocks going to fight?"

Adam's voice sounded like Granpa's. "The Gruenturm family is one of the greatest in the world. It is not altogether surprising that they do not care to claim us."

"They don't, don't they?" Grace demanded "But they'll have to. We have the papers to prove our rights. We have a right to grandmother's dowry with compound interest. Or after all Freddy said, haven't you sense enough to know how it must have piled up in the century since she left Adam's house?"

"I told you it would be wisest to let Michael explain. He will be here shortly. You really have no right to blame me for this, Grace. I'm more disappointed than you are. Come, give us a kiss for consolation."

Grace brushed him aside. "Are those dirty money-sharks ashamed to acknowledge the Delavans? Are they such fools they don't want to acknowledge the only Christian branch of the family? Or are they such misers that they won't open their money bags and dole out a few dollars they'll never miss?"

"Why should they give us the money we claim while we disclaim everything else that makes the Gruenturm Heritage?" Adam asked more of himself than of Grace. "We spit upon their Jewish robes and try to lay hands on their Jewish gold. Why should they submit?"

Grace leaned across the table. She clutched at the cloth so it slipped and knives and forks clattered noisily to the floor.

"Go play that on your violin, you fool!" she cried. "If Michael is as white-livered as you, no wonder the dirty Ghetto spawn think they can hold on to the money that belongs to my children. Talk about 'spitting.' I could spit on the lot of you."

Carlie ran and put her arms around Grace. "Don't, mama! You are hurting papa. See how he is trembling. We don't need their money. I'll be a great sculptor and make lots of money for you. And Don plays the fiddle very well already, so probably he will be a great violinist in a very few years. Probably we will make you rich and famous, mama. Only please don't be angry at papa if Uncle Michael hasn't managed very well in London."

Grace shook her off.

"Maybe the Gruenturms will be proud to claim us some day," Carlie urged. Adam held out his hand and after a moment the child went to his side and snuggled close to him. She felt rather strange with him, not nearly as much a part of him as of Granpa. But suddenly he said words that sounded just as if Granpa were speaking.

"Fidelity, unity, loyalty, concord; that is the Gruenturm motto. The head of the house has not failed. Michael wrote me the facts. There is no getting around them Grace. Only I thought it might be better to let Michael explain at first hand."

"Sidestepping as usual?" Grace inquired.

Adam smiled. Then he spoke drily. "Before my grandmother, Henrietta Gruenturm, Madame de la Vannes, came to America almost a century ago, she went to Paris to have—a talk with her cousin Adam, as you appear to know. He gave her a generous reckoning of her little heritage . . . more than she could have claimed. Fully twice as much as her hundred pounds could have earned even in Gruenturm hands. . . . Adam was generous to his ward. But he was shrewd, so he made Henrietta sign a paper releasing the Gruenturms forever from her claims and those of her heirs."

"How do you know? Why do you believe such a yarn?"

"Enoch has the paper. Michael writes that his records show that Henrietta received thirty thousand francs from Adam ninety odd years ago, and relinquished all claims on the Gruenturm family. Yet Michael received two thousand dollars from Enoch, Lord Gruenturm, last week to reimburse him for this wild-goose chase. It was most generous, but naturally Michael didn't think it wise to waste any money on cables. We will need every cent to get the store out of escrow."

Grace pounced on the salient fact. "Thirty thousand francs! That must have been a fortune a century ago. If Henrietta had received any such sum, she needn't have scrubbed and sewed to support herself and the children's grandfather. Don't you see this yarn won't hold water?"

"It holds water. It would have held in the courts if Michael had been fool enough to try to fight."

"Bah! I'd fight. I'd win. But you and Michael always lose. Evidently Delavan blood didn't mix well with the Shylock strain. You are typical mongrels, you two!"

Adam laughed. Carlie wondered if papa was really amused to see mama jerking the cloth right off the table and tumbling all the plates and knives and forks and spoons in a wreck on the floor.

"There is no Gruenturm Heritage any more," Adam said in a slow voice that ran cold like molasses when you take it out of the ice-box. "And there is not much Delavan Tradition. Adam gave Henrietta her share of the Gruenturm money. And Gervaise gambled away his wife's fortune, lost the thirty thousand francs. When he had finished the destruction of Henrietta's hopes and happiness, the Sieur de la Vannes jumped overboard from the ship that was bringing him and Henrietta and

A. B. Bennett,
Canadian Jewish Review,

A score of problems which faced Canadian Jewry before the convening of the first Canadian Jewish Congress are still waiting to be solved by a national movement such as the Congress was. A more or less uniform system of Jewish Education to replace the present anarchy, both from the point of view of curriculum, and teaching—personnel is one problem deserving the attention of the best minds of Canadian Jewry. The colonization of Jews in larger numbers than the limited activity of the Canadian I.C.A. permits, is a Canadian Jewish problem of first class importance on the solving of which rest another problem of similar importance "a larger Jewish immigration into Canada." On the other hand Canada is the only country with an organized Jewish community keeping aloof from political activity on behalf of the persecuted Jewish minorities in various countries due to the fact that we have no committee in Canada similar to the American Jewish Committee, American Jewish Congress, or Jewish Board of Deputies in England, or South Africa. As a matter of fact, due to the endeavours of Mr. Richards, the secretary of the American Jewish Congress, a provisional committee was organized about six months ago, with some of the most representative Canadian Jews included in the personnel of the Committee, H. M. Caiserman acting as secretary. In spite of my active endeavours to get this committee going I have made no progress as yet.

And many other problems of lesser importance are waiting to be solved as and when a national organization will come into existence. Yet let us remember that the wonderful First Canadian Jewish Congress could not exist because it was an intellectual super-structure (210 delegates of the Congress) with no foundation to rest upon (no organized Jewish Communities). In the light of my experience as secretary of the Canadian Jewish Congress for two years and two years prior to the convening of the Congress, I cannot conceive a real working Canadian Jewish Congress, without a claim of really organized communities. Jewish community councils which are willing to transfer some of their authority to congress of delegates elected by them also including in their yearly budgets, tax provision for the benefit of the Congress. Only such Congress would command the authority it needs to have and be normally so financed that its existence be assured.

Yours very truly,
H. M. Caiserman.

the child he had never seen to America. He didn't die decently of bronchitis as father always claims, and as I suppose that loyal Gruenturm woman must have told her son. Gervaise jumped overboard, leaving Henrietta to face it alone in a strange country with a child and bitter memories and no money to gild them," Adam concluded grimly.

"So that is the end of the Delavan Tradition?" Grace sniffed.

"Not quite. For grandmother brought up her son to believe in it. I think the children have a fine heritage in her courage and nobility. She was true to the faith of her fathers; she was loyal to the memory of her husband—"

"Why, Granpa says that," Carlie broke in. "I've heard that from him, papa, and you say it just like he does."

"You've heard about your Heritage too," Grace sneered. "I'll tell you what it is, my poor child: the Gruenturm Heritage is nothing but slyness and stubbornness and a hooked nose or two. And the Delavan Tradition is the bunk."

(Don had said that once long ago.)

Adam put his arms down on the bare table and set his face in them and sobbed with great heavings of his shoulders that made Carlie vaguely ashamed. Grace turned and ran from the room. That made Carlie very angry. She stayed with her father. She sat quietly at his side wondering how a little girl could comfort a man who was suddenly so old. . . .

The next day, April 15, 1912, the newspapers of the world carried news of the sinking of the Titanic, of the iceberg that had sent Michael and Sara Gruenturm, with hundreds of others, to the bottom of the sea.

For years afterward Carlie used to wonder what the grown-ups would have said if they had known that the very first thought that came to her when she knew about the Titanic was:

"And the little chest of keepsakes is gone too! How will poor Granpa bear that? For now there isn't a bit of Gruenturm Heritage any more."

BOOK II: THE TRADITION

"But the instruction of fools is folly."

CHAPTER I

The world went to war in 1914 and Freddy Frear went into the leather business. Armies must be shod in order to march, so after a time Frear began making a great deal of money and the Delavans claimed their place in the sun. The Heritage had failed, but Fred's success supported the Tradition. He joined a fairly good club and moved to a very good West End Avenue apartment; he took the entire first floor of the Rudnick house and transplanted Granpa from his hall bedroom to even more luxurious quarters than the old man had occupied in the semiprosperous days before Michael Delavan Second and the family's hopes of the Gruenturm Heritage went down to the sea in ships and failed to return.

Henny told her husband it was absurd to spoil an old man like that; she said her father would have been just as well off in one good-sized room and that Tress would have been much better off living with her sister or her aunt.

"It is my money that pays the rent," Freddy reminded his wife. "The old boy always had a high regard for me. He told me once he sometimes felt that I should have been a Gruenturm. One of the satisfactions of my success is that I can share it with the man who picked me for a winner. I'd as soon cut off your father's right hand as separate him from Tress. She stays with Granpa as long as I'm signing the checks. As long as he lives," he added under his breath.

But Tress confided to Carlie that three years of Rudnick's was about enough. She was, it appeared, considering the idea of coaxing the Frears to give her a home.

"It would break Granpa's heart if you went away from him," Carlie said solemnly.

"Silly little Puss, hearts don't break."

"Granpa's would. He couldn't bear to be alone. He's old and he needs you."

"I'm young and I need life. What chance have I to meet the right sort of people at Rudnick's? I'm almost through school; it's time I thought of my future."

"Granpa has only the past, and you, Tress. He always loved you best of any of us and now that his treasure box is gone, you are all he has to remind him of his mama selig."

"Let me alone, Carlie. It isn't right for me to have to sacrifice my whole life because I happen to look like Henrietta Gruenturm — selig," Tress added viciously. "Granpa lived through losing his mother and his wife, didn't he? He can stand it when I go. People bear whatever they have to and you are always much too sorry for them. Look how George Pancoast recovered from losing our Henriette and was graduated from medical school with high honors and a Miss Schermerhorn as a fiancée within a few months after Henriette found she wasnt going to be an heiress and able to afford one of The-Pancoasts-my-dear."

"You're not being very kind, Tress."

"Im being very honest, Carlie. I'm showing you how people, including Delavans, are made and what you can expect from human nature. And I wish you'd stop expecting so frightfully much of me. It isn't quite fair. It puts everything up to me and I really don't like being so responsible; especially I don't like being so responsible for Granpa. As if he'd fade and wither if I weren't here to look after him."

Carlie thought about her answer for a long time before she made it. There was a great deal of evidence to indicate that the Delavans were opportunists, a delightful new word whose none too charming meaning she had acquired recently. Aunt Henny had disclaimed and almost disowned Henriette when her favorite consoled herself for the Pancoast fiasco by flinging herself into marriage with Isidore Kantrowitz, whom she had met when he came to see about refurbishing some old furniture of Aunt Henny's. After Isidore changed his name to Irving Kane and his shop from Upholstering to Interior Decorating and his headquarters from Second Avenue to Madison, Aunt Henny opened her arms and her purse to Henriette again. And after Aunt Henny had given Henriette her old sable scarf and an almost new Persian rug, Henriette consented to be forgiven. None of these things had moved Granpa down from his hall bedroom; none of the Delavans inquired whether he found his dingy quarters irksome; It was Freddy Frear whose magic wand brought comfort and luxury to the old man. Carlie had an idea that if Tress failed Granpa now he would be terribly ashamed before Uncle Fred. considered many ways of presenting this idea to Tress and finally said:

"If you married Joe you could stay on here at Rudnick's."

"Granpa is fond of him. But we're planning for me, not Granpa. And I want to marry out of Rudnick's, not deeper into it."

"Joe is handsome. You like him yourself, Tress."

"Maybe. But I'm not heading back to the Ghetto, and that's what it would be doing to marry a man with the name Morgenstern and a store on Lenox Avenue. I'm a Delavan, not a Gruenturm. Anyway, the Gruenturms put us out. Out of Granpa's Street of Chains. I'm going to stay out. There are things I want to life, things Jews can't have; and I'm not really Jewish, so why should I pretend I am?"

"Granpa swore us to fidelity, unity, loyalty, and concord," Carlie reminded her.

"Blah! Anyway, being a united family and being loyal to each other doesn't mean standing up for the race that has disowned us and that I'd be delighted to disown. And we can forget all about having Jewish blood if we like. Our name is Delavan. You look Irish. And I—if I'm half as beautiful as Joe says I am, I ought to be able to get anything I want of life. Am I beautiful, Carlie?"

"You're gorgeous, Tress. You look just like Granpa's mama selig, he says. Please be wonderful like she was. I mean don't hurt Granpa or disappoint him. You're pledged fidelity to your own, Tress. And if you did anything to make Granpa unhappy, I'd never forgive you. Never."

"I'd never do anything you couldn't forgive."

"I'd forgive you anything except hurting Granpa."

"I promised I'd never do anything you couldn't forgive. You're a funny little Puss, but I couldn't bear having you angry at me. I guess I think as much of you as Granpa does of me."

Carlie thrilled to this, but it wasn't quite what she wanted. It seemed cruel to mean so much to Tress that Granpa didn't count. Carlie knew she didn't need Tress the way Granpa did. She was fourteen and everything lay ahead. Granpa was eighty-nine and there was nothing more to come except ninety . . . or maybe a hundred, if Tress loved him enough to keep his heart warm so he would want to stay alive.

CHAPTER II

On Christmas Eve of 1915 when Carlie was as old as the new century, she and Don came to have dinner with Granpa and Tress at Rudnick's. The three young Delavans were going on later to a tree and dance at Uncle Fred's club, a situation which caused Granpa to shake his head and purse his puckered old mouth.

"Aie, aie!" he muttered to himself as if he knew his words were futile. "I have lived too long, since the day comes when I behold my grandchildren denying their heritage and going over to the Krists."

He declined to partake of the gayety with which the Rudnick boarders greeted the roast goose which the hostess stoutly denied had been chosen with any thought of the Goy holiday. She said having Granpa ask for a special table with Carlie and Don and her folks and Mr. Morgenstern as guests was enough to make a body take a little extra thought for dinner and she guessed the spetzlich and prunes and chestnuts and matzoth torte didn't have much to do with the twenty-fifth of December and now look how Mr. Delavan wasn't eating a thing and Mr. Morgenstern was spending more time looking at Tressie than at his plate. Whereupon Joe Morgenstern, as blond as the Shepherd Kings of Israel and as imperturbable as the Sphinx of their captivity, said quietly:

"I'd be much obliged if you'd order some poached eggs for Mr. Delavan, Mrs. Rudnick. And a nice cup of cocoa perhaps and some of that delicious sponge cake we had last night. Knowing what a good provider you are, I imagine there's some left and maybe it would slip down easier than goose and chestnuts."

"You ain't Mr. Delavan's grandson yet; so why do you elect yourself to look after him?" demanded Selma Rudnick, a dynamic brunette of sixteen.

Tress scowled; Mrs. Rudnick gave orders for the eggs and cocoa and for Selma to be quiet; and Granpa said that Joe was very thoughtful and maybe eggs would be better for him than the delicious roast goose, since he was just a mite under the weather tonight.

"You'd enjoy your dinner more if you'd stop fretting about my going to the Christmas Tree dance at the club tonight," Tress said crisply. "Why don't you calm down? They don't use poison ivy for Christmas greens."

"Cut out the greens and go to a show with me, Tress," Joe suggested. "I'll bet that would tickle Granpa so he'd recover his appetite. And hats are selling by the dozen today, so I'm feeling prosperous enough to plank down a twenty-dollar bill for a couple of orchestra chairs at the Winter Garden. But any show you like is the one I'm pining to see and I don't care how rich some scalper gets on me tonight."

"I'll go with you tomorrow night, Joe, I can't break my engagement for this evening."

"I can buy the tickets cut rate tomorrow night for half price. Christmas night is an off evening in the theater. But I'd rather shell out double the money tonight. I'm anxious to give myself your society tonight for a Christmas present, the only present worth wrapping up and carrying home. Come on, Tress. Cut out the Tree."

"Aie, aie! better go with Joe," Granpa urged.

Tress was formal. She said Uncle Fred was expecting her at the club and one did not cancel engagements at the last moment merely to suit a whim.

"I am old," Granpa mourned. "It is true that the aged have their whims. But this is not a whim. It is my heart's desire that my grandchildren shall not go over to the enemies of our race."

"Listen, Granpa," Tress said curtly. "I come from two races; I'm not taking sides or going against either; but please remember that there are two. Christmas candles belong to me just as much as Chanukah lights."

Granpa hung his head and muttered sadly. Carlie slipped her hand over his, but he did not respond to the touch of her fingers nor lift his eyes until Tress snuggled up against him and whispered: "Listen, darling, I won't have a bit of fun if I go off remembering you in a fit of the blues. If you don't smile or eat or act a little happier you'll spoil my evening. Do you want to do that?"

"Do I ever want to spoil anything for you, Theresa?" Granpa asked. "But I cannot eat when I am not hungry. And tonight I have no appetite at all."

"He won't be alone," Carlie said briskly. "If I went tonight Don would have to take me home at eleven. So there isn't any sense in my going. And anyway I'd enjoy spending the evening with Granpa much more than seeing a whole forest of trees strung with lights."

"You go along to the club, Carlie. I'd be tickled to pieces to stay with your Granpa," Joe Morgenstern offered.

"As if I'd let you have my place!" Carlie protested.

"Then do you want to come along to the club with us in the kid's place, Joe?" asked Don with spacious hospitality. "There will be great doings and Tress will be sure of one partner if you are there."

Tress pinioned Don with her eyes. "Unfortunately this is Uncle Fred's party and he has selected his own list of guests. If Carlie chooses to stay with Granpa, we'll have to go by ourselves. Uncle Fred hasn't given us the privilege of substituting anyone for her. We can't take an uninvited——"

"Morgenstern," Joe said brusquely. "Quit floundering for language, Tress, and come out with the word that does the trick. Gawd, what a snob you are, and what a fool I am to love you so!"

Selma Rudnick giggled. "Attaboy! Bawl her out and then chuck her out, Joe. After which, if you need consolation or company, I'm game to break my date and step out with you tonight even if it is only to a movie."

"I'll take you to a show," Joe said. "And Tress Delavan can go to just where she is going."

Granpa got to his feet; they were unsteady and his hands pressed heavily on his cane. "My grandchildren will wish to freshen themselves up somewhat before going to their uncle's club," he said with a grave little bow to Mrs. Rudnick. "So I am sure you will excuse us."

She was flustered. "Never mind the young folks. They are all so fresh today I don't know what the world is coming to. I have to apologize for Selma. And I'm going to send your coffee up to your room, Mr. Delavan. I guess Tressie would like a cup."

"The coffee will be welcome. I bid you all a pleasant good evening." Granpa was stately, though his feet shuffled so heavily that Don took his arm at the door of the dining room and asked with sudden gentleness:

"Wouldn't you like if we all stayed home with you, sir? I'm game. Some of the best times I've ever had were sitting in your room and traveling way back to Frankfort and the Dark Ages with you."

Reduction of public debt and remission of taxes -- under the King Administration

Public debt reduced: - - $257,866,939

Remission of taxes - - - - $118,000,000

"Normally a national debt is paid off by increasing taxes. We have reduced our national debt and at the same time have reduced taxes . . . The explanation lies in the remarkable prosperity which has come to Canada under liberal policies since 1922".

—From Premier King's Brantford Speech, June 16th, 1930.

King Architect of Prosperity

Every year, since 1926, the King Administration has substantially reduced the national debt. It is estimated that, if future Canadian governments could continue the debt reduction at the same rate, in less than 40 years Canada would see its total public debt entirely paid off.

During the last five years, while the debt was being reduced and surpluses created, the Canadian tax-payer had the pleasure to find his burden $118,000,000 lighter. Thus were the income taxes gradually reduced. The 6% sales tax was reduced to 5% in 1924, to 4% in 1927, to 3% in 1928, to 2% in 1929 and to 1% in 1930. The "nuisance taxes" on cheques, receipts, railway and steamship tickets, insurance premiums, telegrams and cablegrams were abolished, except a flat rate of 2 cents on cheques above $10.00. In 1926, letter postage was reduced from 3 cents to 2 cents and in 1928 penny postage was re-established from Canada to other parts of the British Empire.

Thus, despite the heavy burden of debt, – which conservative extravagance had increased instead of making lighter, – the King Government succeeded in balancing the budget, in reducing our national debt and taxes, in stimulating our industry and commerce and in bringing to Canada the greatest period of progress it has known.

B. C. POWER CORPORATION

Higher gross earnings are shown by British Electric Railway Company, operating subsidiary of the British Columbia Power Corporation, for the month of May and the eleven months ending May 31st, 1930, but net both for the month and for the 11-month period shows a decline.

SOUTHERN CANADA POWER

Reflecting the continued industrial expansion of the Eastern Townships of Quebec, which territory it furnishes with electric services, the Southern Canada Power Company, Limited in May recorded an increase in net earnings for the forty-fourth consecutive month. In a very satisfactory statement covering the month of May and the eight months ending May 31st, 1929, substantial increases are shown in gross earnings, and despite higher operating expenses a gratifying increase in net earnings in each case.

CANADIAN BRONZE

With many lines of industry showing considerable reduction in activity, it is stated business of Canadian Bronze Company in the first half of the current year has been holding up remarkably well. At a recent meeting of directors statements submitted showed earnings running almost on a par with those for the same period a year ago.

CANADA NORTHERN POWER

An increase of $1,584 in gross earnings for May and of $23,479 for the five months ending May 31, is reported by Canada Northern Power Corporation, Limited. Operating expenses, however, are up for both periods, resulting in reductions in net earnings amounting to $7,934 in the month of May, and to $7,428 for the five months ending May 31.

HONEY DEW

Earnings of Honey Dew, Ltd. for the first five months of the current year increased by over $42,000 when compared with the corresponding months of 1929, according to E. C. Lindsay, secretary-treasurer.

CANADIAN INDUSTRIAL ALCOHOL

The vindication of Lord Shaughnessy's administration of the estate of Sir Mortimer Davis and of the Canadian Industrial Alcohol Co. revives the question as to the probability of a merger being consummated between that company and Hiram Walker-Gooderham & Worts. A consolidation is understood to have been almost completed with legal action was taken against Lord Shaughnessy by Lady Davis, and this served to delay new developments.

International Pete Increased Output Despite Conditions in Industry

DURING the first five months of 1930 official reports as to the operations of International Petroleum in Colombia and Peru indicate that the company has not been greatly troubled by all the agitation under way in the United States as to curtailment of production.

During the first five months of its fiscal year, International Pete not only showed an increase in production, but, which is more to the point from the angle of measuring what is actually going on in the company's operations, it shipped a total of 10,002,360 barrels, compared with shipments of 9,385,483 barrels during the corresponding period of the previous years. The gain was 6.4%.

Pete's increase, not only in production, but shipments, applies to both Colombia and Peru fields. Colombia shipments were 7,774,055 barrels, compared with 7,346,658 barrels during the first five months of 1929. The increase was 5.6%. Peru shipments were 2,228,305 barrels, compared with 2,038,835 for the corresponding period of 1929. The gain was 14.2% or an increase of 6.4% for the two fields.

At the same time new wells have been brought in at a satisfactory rate. The figures accordingly show the advantage which International Petroleum enjoys is being partly independent of the United States for the marketing of its products. During the period though Pete has registered substantial advances in both production and shipments, there has been an almost continuous agitation in the United States. It began early in January and a despatch from California indicated that officials were still struggling with the curtailment problem.

Pete's enviable position lies in the fact that it has its own refineries in South America and that it has developed satisfactory markets among the South American countries. International Petroleum is not on a rationing basis, though it is reasonable to assume that if there was not all the trouble over oil production in the States, that market would be wider for Pete's imports.

The Colombia shipping field is operating at capacity.

Mining & Oil

NORANDA

Mining operations at Noranda mines are proceeding on a somewhat enlarged scale; the smelter is running at about 2,100 tons to 600 tons daily. Present plans call for the speeding-up of the concentrator to 1,000 tons. In the not distant future. When asked if it was the intention of Noranda to curtail operations President Murdoch stated that no such action was contemplated. On the contrary, upwards of 100 men have been added to the payroll recently and work is being pushed.

CONSOLIDATED MINING & SMELTING

Production figures for the second quarter of 1929, just made public by the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Co. of Canada, Ltd. make a very satisfactory comparison with those of the corresponding period of 1929. In fact, lead was the only item in which a sizeable increase over 1929 was not shown, that metal showing a moderate decline. In zinc, copper, gold and silver the increases are large, being particularly so with copper.

FALCONBRIDGE NICKEL

Falconbridge Nickel Mines smelter handled a total of 25,378 tons of ore in the three months ending June 30, according to the quarterly report issued by the company. In the same period matte produced from this tonnage amounted to 1,896,833 pounds containing 1,089,715 pounds of nickel and 477,150 pounds of copper. The refinery at Kristiansand, Norway, produced 476,316 pounds of refined nickel.

TREADWELL YUKON

Crosscutting has commenced from the main shaft of the Errington mine of Treadwell-Yukon. No estimate of the distance to ore bodies can be presented. The ore on the Errington occurs in the form of large lenses occurring more or less irregularly in a zone which is about 2,000 feet in width and over several miles in length. Some of the lenses in this zone are several hundred

ARNO MINES

Rumours in circulation are to the effect that Bunker Hill Extension Mines, Limited, has secured an option on a mining property. Officials of the venture are reticent, but in some circles Arno Mines has been mentioned as the property on which the option has been or is being secured.

CARNEGIE PETE

Whether the Red Coulee field will be extended, several miles to the South and west will be decided shortly by operations now proceeding in the territory. One good test is Carnegie Pete, now drilling more than 2,000 feet. Carnegie struck a small showing of gas at 16,00 feet from sands occurring in the Colorado shales. The "Tip" O'Neil well, six miles west from Carnegie, was drilling at about the same depth with similar logging conditions. Producers & Refiners, a subsidiary of Standard is reported to be contemplating three wells in this general area.

NORDON OILS

A total valuation of $8,016,000, equal to over $4. a share on the 1,840,014 shares outstanding, is shown on the recently completed reports on the properties of Nordan Corporation. During the last eight months, the interim report states, Nordon has greatly augmented its holdings in many different localities, with the result that total lease and royalty holdings now amount to 248,307 acres. This will shortly be increased by blocks now applied for and acquisitions planned.

As the language of the face is universal so is it very comprehensive; no laconism can reach it; it is the shorthand of the mind, and crowds a great deal in a little room. A man may look a sentence as soon as speak a word; the strokes are small, but so masterly drawn that you may easily collect the image and proportions of what they resemble.

To make a good resolution, but adjourn the date upon which it is to go into effect, is practically to renounce it before we begin it. No such postponed effort ever amounted to anything. The man who really resolves acts in the present, always.

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancor,
That for what it cost me to be free,
I might have had an anchor."

When the race cry against Jews was raised by Montreal politicians lately in preparation for the coming election, such tactics were roundly scored by Gentiles as well as Jews and it was in great haste that verbal oil was poured over troubled waters. In Toronto the inflammable subject of race and religion in politics was actually broached by certain Jews themselves. The following call to arms is translated from the Yiddish as it appeared in a July issue of the Hebrew Journal, Toronto's Yiddish daily:

"It is time for work.

"The desired happened.

"The request was granted. The Liberal party with the consent of the party leaders have nominated a Jewish candidate in Centre West Toronto, a neighborhood which has thousands of Jewish residents, citizens of Canada and voters. Therefore, it must be the verdict of all to settle a question which is dear to the Jewish heart to work in unity for the selection of the Liberal candidate. The nominated candidate is well known to the citizens of Centre West. He is now their representative in the City Council and has the confidence of every right-thinking person and the Jewish vote must go to him.

"Votes alone is not enough. It must be the purpose of every one to see that the 12,000 Jewish votes in West Centre shall register and only with them can the election be retained.

"Up to now Montreal and Winnipeg give Jewish representation.

"Let us hope that we shall not remain an orphan in the coming election.

"To work with energy for the selection of Samuel Factor as the Jewish representative in West Centre!"

There is nothing good about such a cheap, melodramatic appeal as the above and everything bad. It is unfortunate for Mr. Factor to be advertised thus by his fond adherents. It is one way of killing his dignity with kindness of the wrong sort. Aside from the content of the appeal to Jewish voters the fact that it is in Yiddish makes it appeared cloaked from the Gentile eye. It was bound to be translated and printed into English, anyway. Why make bad matters worse by appearing underhanded?

As for the content of the appeal, the originators of it frankly invoke the race cry which Jews are always the first to condemn when it is raised against them. After the manner which they themselves complain of hysterically, they framed their address to the people without any reference at all to the issues of the election. Forgetful of the emphasis they themselves put upon the faintest gesture of discrimination on the part of non-Jews against them, they made the blunder of placing themselves in the position where they can never again freely object to anti-Semitism in politics. In the above bid for support the Hebrew Journal exhorts all the 12,000 Jewish voters to cast 12,000 votes for the Jewish candidate because his election is so dear to the Jewish heart. The appeal is unquestionably and inexcusably a sectional one.

Such an occurrence as the race cry being sounded by Jews themselves is enough to make every right-minded other Jew burn with resentment and helplessness. For one thing there is no such article in existence as the Jewish vote and any fawning, boot-licking politician, Jewish or otherwise, who might promise to hand it over to any political machine anywhere can never guarantee delivery. The independence of the Jewish voter is axiomatic. He is no docile sheep and he votes not as a Jew but as a voter. The very one who may claim to carry the Jewish vote in his pocket knows this and snickers secretly at the stupid Gentile who believes anything else.

The REVIEW speaks for the best element in Toronto Jewry and Canadian Jewry when it denounces the call made on behalf of Mr. Factor. It was an injustice to him and to the entire community of Canadian Jewry. This sober element realizes how ill-advised it is to play with such dynamite as the sectional appeal. It as strongly condemns the action of the Hebrew Journal in raising the race cry as it condemns non-Jews guilty of this offence. The last thing desired by the majority of Jews in Canada is for any section of Canadian citizens to keep itself apart on the ground of race and religion.

From Our Contemporaries

Why the Lipskyites Were Beaten at Cleveland

By Nathaniel Zalowitz, in the Jewish Forward

Louis Lipsky and his adherents were beaten before the convention of the Zionist Organization of America opened; beaten partly by themselves, but in the main by conditions and circumstances over which they had no control. The victory of the Brandeis-Mack group was a foregone conclusion months before the delegates to the 33rd annual convention foregathered in Cleveland.

It all began last August when Moslem mobs slaughtered defenseless Jews in the Holy City. Followed the investigation by the British commission and its unfavorable findings. Then came the British White Paper and the barring of Jewish immigration into Palestine. The out-and-out Zionist, the 100 per cent organization man was not discouraged by the events. But the 'outsider,' the sympathizer, the man in the street was stunned by the blows which an unkind fate dealt the Jewish national cause. The average Jew has not yet regained his equilibrium; he cannot orient himself; he is baffled, dazed. At such an inauspicious time a movement cannot be expected to thrive, to grow in membership and influence and funds. And when things go wrong the prestige of the administration inevitably suffers: the leaders are held blameworthy by the rank and file.

But the biggest single blow was dealt the Lipsky regime by the Jewish Agency. For nine years the Zionist Organization of America had been a collection agency for Palestine Jewry. Something like twenty million dollars in round numbers were collected. The Keren Hayesod was under the aegis of the Z.O.A. A huge apparatus for the collection and distribution of the funds was rapidly built up. The Z.O.A. itself received an annual subvention of one hundred thousand dollars from the Keren Hayesod. The official Zionist organs—"Dos Yiddishe Folk" and "The New Palestine"—were the organs of the Keren Hayesod. A great deal of money was spent for publicity in the Yiddish and English language press. There were dozens of itinerant speakers, scores of stenographers, collectors, branch managers and all the rest. A veritable army; a necessary army of paid employees, to be sure, but still an army. The offices of the Z.O.A. on Fifth Avenue were a beehive of activity.

With the formation of the Jewish Agency all this was changed overnight. The subvention to the Z.O.A. was withdrawn. The office staff was discharged. The numerous active Zionists who had been employed as organizers, agitators, etc., found themselves on the outside. The shekel collections were insufficient to meet the impressive budget of the Z.O.A. Wages were cut all along the line, "Dos Yiddishe Folk" was suspended, "The New Palestine," reduced in size. And the deficit during the current year amounted to one hundred and thirty-eight thousand dollars!

Nor was this all. There began a series of voluntary resignations which demoralized the morale of the organization. Early in the Spring Meyer Weisgal, general secretary of the Z.O.A. and editor of "The New Palestine," accepted a position in Toronto as editor of a newly founded weekly. This was a blow to the Lipsky regime. Weisgal was Lipsky's right hand man, a shrewd lieutenant, rough and ready in battle, no mincer of words. Weisgal's resignation from "The New Palestine" was due to the fact that that excellent weekly which he had built up from small beginnings would hereafter have to subsist on a fraction of its former budget. His resignation was a precursor of other resignations to follow.

The rank and file of the Z.O.A. did not have long to wait. Louis Lipsky, who had voluntarily reduced his own salary a year ago from $12,000 to $7,500 per annum, announced that he would become president of the Judea Life Insurance Company. This happened several weeks prior to the 33rd annual convention in Cleveland. That was a tactical error of the first magnitude. For thereby he had eliminated himself from the field as a candidate for re-election to the presidency of the Z.O.A. The administration let it be known that it would favor an amendment to the constitution making the presidency a non-salaried office. Nobody put much stock in that statement. Lipsky's action was rightly enough interpreted as an admission that he no longer would be president of the Z.O.A. With Lipsky out of the running consternation prevailed in the ranks.

The final blow was the unlooked for and inexplicable resignation of Morris Rothenberg as vice-president of the Z.O.A. His letter of resignation was ineptly worded; it said in effect that Mr. Rothenberg desired to retire from Zionist activities on account of "lack of time." Rothenberg had been a leading American Zionist for a quarter of a century, a delegate to any number of World Zionist Congresses, a bulwark of the Lipsky regime. To resign in such trying times, on the eve of a national convention, and for such trivial reasons, made a painful impression on the general membership of the Z.O.A.

Verily, three national leaders—Weisgal, Lipsky and Rothenberg—were scuttling the Zionist skiff in mid ocean.

No one at the convention doubted that the Brandeis-Mack faction would take over the Z.O.A. lock, stock and barrel. It was only a question of sugar coating the bitter pill. The Brandeis Memorandum was unacceptable to the majority of the delegates on account of the lofiness of its tone and the fact that it left the Z.O.A. virtually suspended in mid-air. A so-called Committee of Nine Non-Partisans was to handle Zionist affairs for an indeterminate period. Moreover, the Memorandum left no room for doubt that adherents of the Lipsky regime would hereafter not be welcome in the Zionist administration.

Brandeis was accordingly prevailed upon by Judge Lewis and others to modify his terms. His brief note

"to the delegates of the Zionist Organization of America in convention assembled" completely and instantaneously won them over. It was the first time in nine long years that the noted jurist addressed a communication to his fellow Zionists directly. The felicity of the language, the touching reference to his advancing years, together with his expression of unwavering faith in the Zionist ideal clinched the issue. From that moment Judge Brandeis could have gotten anything he wished.

And all he wished was that Jacob De Haas, ignominiously deposed in 1921, should be returned to office! Returned amidst the plaudits and cheers of the delegates who had booed and derided him at the first Cleveland convention nine years ago.

Two-thirds of the new Administrative Committee will consist of Brandeis adherents. But that is only a form of speech. Rabbi Silver of Cleveland is no ordinary Brandeis follower; he is as close to Lipsky as to Brandeis. As for Emanuel Neumann and Nathan Ratnoff—they are out-and-out Lipskyites. Then, of course, there is Dr. Wise. Officially he is counted with the Mack-Brandeis group, but in reality he belongs to quite another group altogether—the pro-Wise faction. The fact is that the so-called Brandeis-Mack group is so insignificant in numbers that it couldn't muster a minyan outstanding delegates at the convention to assume office. Outsiders and Lipskyites were drafted to fill in the depleted ranks of the De Haas followers.

The uproar over Dr. Wise's statement to the Associated Press on the eve of the convention, followed as it was by his election three days later as a member of the new administration, bewildered the "country" delegates, but was meat for the cynics.

When Rabbi Wise's statement was called to the attention of the Zionist leaders they could not find words enough wherewith to condemn the famous pulpiteer. Ab. Goldberg, his voice choking with emotion, declared that in the Sinn Fein movement "such a wanton betrayal of the national cause would not be left unpunished; yet all we Jews and Zionists can do at such a time is to rend our garments and sit down to mourn." Mr. Lipsky moreover, was so distraught that he begged the newspaper correspondents to excuse him for not making any public comment.

But neither Goldberg's tears nor Lipsky's anger stood in the way of their supporting Wise's nomination three days later. Mr. Fishman made a valiant attempt to keep Wise out of the administration, without much success. In the name of "peace and union" the "Jewish renegade" of June 28 became the tried and trusted Zionist leader on July 1.

The point I am stressing is that the Lipskyites affected to be more distressed by Wise's statement than in reality was the case. Without venturing an opinion on the propriety and tactfulness of Rabbi Wise's eleventh hour assault on the Lipsky administration, still it appears to me (a rank outsider) that Wise had not been guilty of a heinous offense. It is customary for the party in power to "point with pride" to the very achievements which the opposition "views with alarm." You can hear such phrases as "the Government stands morally condemned," in the House of Commons any day in the week. "The Hoover administration is morally bankrupt"—the democrats (and the Socialists even more forcibly) are saying it day in and day out. Wise had not charged Lipsky with venality or moral turpitude; he had criticized his administration as inefficient, feeble and lacking in influence at home and abroad. A man doesn't deserve to be shot at dawn for saying as much about his rival.

There's no guessing at this time how the Lipskyites will get along with De Haas. It is more than likely that the minority group will not make any trouble for the majority. All the same, you never can tell. De Haas and Lipsky have never wasted any love on each other.

The vital question, needless to say, is: what effect, if any, will the victory of Judge Brandeis have on world Zionist affairs? Will the American Zionists, led by Judge Mack, De Haas and Robt. Szold, support Dr. Weizmann's policies at the World Zionist Congress next summer? Do Brandeis and Weizmann see eye to eye at this time as regards the political and economic outlook for Palestine?

It was no secret that, back in 1921, Brandeis was defeated with the help of Weizmann. Does the present return of Brandeis signify that the famous jurist and the no less famous chemist have buried their hatchets? At the convention there were rumors current that Weizmann had cabled Lipsky to make peace with Brandeis "at any cost." Otherwise, it is urged, the Lipskyites would never have surrendered to "the enemy."

There has been a great deal of opposition to the alleged "policy of vacillation" pursued by Weizmann in recent years. Weizmann was able to retain his power owing to the support of Lipsky and the American delegation. Should the Brandeis group, now dominant in the American Zionist movement, oppose Weizman's candidacy next summer, what would happen? Would Weizmann be compelled to step down and make room for, say, Lord Melchett?

Would Judge Brandeis, despite his 74 years, be willing to become president of the World Zionist Organization? And would he have to resign his present judicial office in order to do so?

These are questions which anybody, of course, can ask, but nobody can answer at this time.

It is not to be doubted that the new administration will wipe out the deficit; but will it succeed in increasing the membership? The number of dues-paying members (excluding the Hadassah) is only 18,000. There were twice that number a few years ago. Will the new administration stress the political aims of the Zionist movement? But Judge Brandeis and Judge Mack have always stressed the economic rehabilitation of Palestine as the really vital task of the Zionist movement. With the Jewish Agency taking care of the economic aspects of the Palestine 'yishub,' what, under these circumstances, remains for the Z.O.A. to do?

Marriages

Rasminsky-Rotenberg

The marriage took place Tuesday, July 15th., of Lyla, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Rotenberg, to Louis, son of Mr. and Mrs. D. Rasminsky. The groom, an honor graduate of the class of '28 of the University of Toronto, has recently returned from London, where he has been pursuing post-graduate work in the London School of Economics. The marriage was solemnized at the home of the bride at 181 Warren Rd. at 2.30 o'clock. A reception was held after the ceremony. The couple sail July 18 from Montreal on the Duchess of Atholl and will spend some time in France and Germany before taking up residence in Geneva, where Mr. Rasminsky has been appointed to the economics department of the League of Nations.

Temes, 808 College Street, took place at Old Spain, Friday, July 11th. Rabbi Rizenman officiated. Dr. and Mrs. Temes will live in Ansonville, Ont.

FRATERNAL SOFTBALL

The standing of the Fraternal League up to the week of July 14th, is as follows:

Team	Won	Lost	Tied
Foresters	4	2	2
Bnai Brith	3	3	2
Pride of Israel	0	3	2

In the recent games played I.O.F. was again much too good for the Pythians, winning by a big score, while in the meeting between Judeans and Pride of Israel, the leaders maintained their winning streak. Ginsberg twirled as good ball as Robinson for Judeans, but a bad frame gave the Judeans the win. Fisher at first for the Prides again played a startling game at the initial sack, while he led the team at bat. In Friday's benefit game between the leading Judeans, of the Fraternal League and Aberleys of the Beaches League, the visitors had the edge on the local team. Duke started for Judeans, but was succeeded by Robinson, who was also hit hard. Manilla who substituted for "Lefty" Starr was the standout for the team, making some fine catches in centre, while his homer with two on, put across three of the four runs, the visitors getting nine. The collection for the injured Bnai Brith player, H. I. Donn, although promising, was not as large as such cause deserve.

Two smart twin bills are carded for the coming week, Tuesday's doubleheader calling for Pythians to meet I. O. F. in the early game, with Pride of Israel playing Bnai Brith in the late one. On Friday night Pythians are at home to Pride of Israel in the first game, with a feature meeting between the leading Judeans and the second place Foresters, in the closing contest.

LOEW'S THEATRE OFFERS

"This Mad World"

Basil Rathbone, distinguished stage star, Louise Dresser, beautiful and gifted veteran of stage and screen and Kay Johnson, one of the most attractive of the younger actresses making good in the talking studios, are the trio who carry William De Mille's great picture "This Mad World" to a phenomenal success.

This unusual and brilliantly acted feature will be the attraction at Loew's Theatre all next week, and constitutes the high water mark of screen entertainment of the year at Loew's. "This Mad World" is a French romance, and tells the poignant story of a young French spy, his mother and his sweetheart. Mme. Pauline is ordered by the Germans occupying the territory about her home, to give shelter to a German Princess who is on her way to join her husband. Paul, the son and soldier to whom important messages are entrusted falls in love with the beautiful young German girl, and she reciprocates his infatuation. Amid a whirl of excitement and terror they risk their lives for their love and then give their lives for their greater love, their countries. The picture is magnificently acted and wonderfully directed with a splendid smoothness throughout the most difficult scenes.

The Runaway Four, one of America's most sensational dance quartettes, will head the stage show which is excellent, and also includes the versatile Ralph Olsen and his beautiful girls in "Dance Diversions."

French Dressing

½ t salt
¼ t paprika
4 T salad oil
2 T lemon juice

Mix ingredients in order given and stir or shake thoroughly just before serving. A dover egg beater may be used. To be used on vegetable salads requiring dressing that will allow the retaining of original color and texture.

Mayonnaise

with whole egg

1 egg
1 t salt
¼ t mustard
½ t sugar
1½ c salad oil
2 t lemon juice or vinegar

Break egg into cold bowl and beat slightly. Add the oil a few drops at a time until one fourth of it has been added. Then add the oil by tablespoons until all has been added. Add the seasonings and beat until mixture is smooth. The dressing is more easily made if the bowl is set in a bowl of cracked ice. Use a dover egg beater. This may be used with vegetable and meat salads and most molded and frozen salads.

EVERYBODY KNEW THE OIL PEDLER

The house-wives of the 'eighties knew the oil-pedler. He used to call around every day or so selling kerosene for oil lamps.

Imperial Oil was a new company in those days, with one small refinery at Sarnia, Ontario. Its chief effort was to make a good, pure, safe kerosene. The oil-pedler was an important part of the distribution system.

He is only a quaint memory today. In his place Imperial has now a vast service system reaching into every corner of Canada — on both seaboards — in every town — across the Prairies — through the mining camps — in Arctic caches for northern fliers.

The supply comes from Imperial's six great refineries by miles of Imperial tank cars — by its lake boats — by hundreds of its trucks — by dog team trails. To bring the finest crude petroleum to its refineries, Imperial has derricks in Peru — pipelines through Colombian swamps — its big tank ships on the Atlantic and Pacific.

Imperial has grown in this way by constant enterprise and effort to achieve the perfection of gasoline and lubrication on which modern transportation and industry depend. It has grown because people have learned to buy Imperial Oil products with confidence.

Marvelube is Imperial's finest motor oil. Imperial Premier and Imperial Ethyl are its best gasoline. Which means that nothing finer can be put in your car.
